

ABSTRACT

A mobile station monitors common channels for information that can be used to associate a location to an infrastructure element identification. The mobile station stores such information in a database. The database can be accessed at a later time to estimate the location of the mobile station based on comparing previous location/infrastructure element ID pairs to the pairs collected at the later time.

10150688.doc